RÉSUMÉ. Nous proposons de réviser le codage de l'égyptien ancien qui repose sur un standard nommé « manuel de codage » (1988) ne répondant pas aux besoins actuels dans la création de corpus hiéroglyphiques. Une analyse des 60 000 graphies du corpus Ramsès nous permet de faire deux propositions concrètes concernant, d'une part, les principes présidant à l'encodage des graphies hiéroglyphiques dans les corpus annotés et, d'autre part, la nécessaire refonte du répertoire des signes hiéroglyphiques.

ABSTRACT. Based on an analysis of the 60 000 spellings found in the Ramses corpus, we show that the encoding scheme that is used for hieroglyphic texts, known as the Manuel de Codage (1988), is problematic for the development of text corpora in general. We consequently (1) argue in favour of basic principles that should be followed when encoding hieroglyphic texts in the framework of corpus projects, and (2) suggest guidelines for a new encoding scheme, especially with respect to the structure of the sign-list.

RÉSUMÉ. Le standard Unicode pour les hiéroglyphes égyptiens a été validé en 2009 après des années de débats sans que pourtant l'ensemble de la communauté des égyptologues ait été associée au processus. L'Unicode actuel valide quelque 1200 caractères, les plus usités de la période classique. Son extension n'est pas envisagée dans l'immédiat. Si, toutefois, on souhaite travailler sur l'ensemble des textes hiéroglyphiques, de l'époque archaïque aux époques hellénistique et romaine, c'est de plus de 10 000 caractères qu'il faudrait disposer, un objectif que l'Unicode ne se propose en aucun cas d'atteindre. Je travaille actuellement à l'élaboration d'un dictionnaire de l'égyptien ancien, sous forme d'une base de données lexicales, ainsi qu'à une base de données inventoriant l'ensemble des hiéroglyphes. Ces deux bases se fondent sur la documentation lexicale et paléographique que j'ai rassemblée au cours des quarante dernières années, la seconde ayant vocation à dresser un catalogue aussi exhaustif que possible des caractères hiéroglyphiques actuellement connus à partir des monuments publiés en photographie ou en facsimilé. C'est un travail qui n'a jamais été entrepris par l'égyptologie depuis le déchiffrement des hiéroglyphes par Champollion en 1822. Une fois achevé, il servira de base à la constitution d'une fonte numérique couvrant tous les besoins de la recherche, quelle que soit la période de l'écriture envisagée. C'est aussi sur cette fonte que s'appuiera le dictionnaire pour la rédaction de ses notices.

ABSTRACT. The Unicode standard for Egyptian hieroglyphs was validated in 2009 after years of debate, though the whole community of egyptologists was not associated to the process. As to the present time, Unicode validates the most common 1200 characters of the classical period. No extension is planned in a near future. However, if one needs to work on hieroglyphic texts as a whole, conspicuously more than 10 000 characters are needed, a goal Unicode certainly do not intend to achieve. I am currently working on a dictionary of ancient Egyptian, taking on the form of a lexical data base, and on another data base inventorying all the hieroglyphs. Both are based upon the lexical and palaeographical documentation I collected over the past forty years, the last being intended to produce a catalogue as exhaustive as possible of all hieroglyphs presently known from publications in photographs or facsimiles. This work was never undertaken by egyptology since the decipherment of hieroglyphs by Champollion in 1822. Once completed it will serve as a source for a new digital font meeting all the requirements of the research, no matter which period of the writing is taken into account. This font will ultimately be used for the editorial work on the dictionary.

The Hieroglyphic Sign Functions¹

Suggestions for a Revised Taxonomy

Stéphane Polis/Serge Rosmorduc

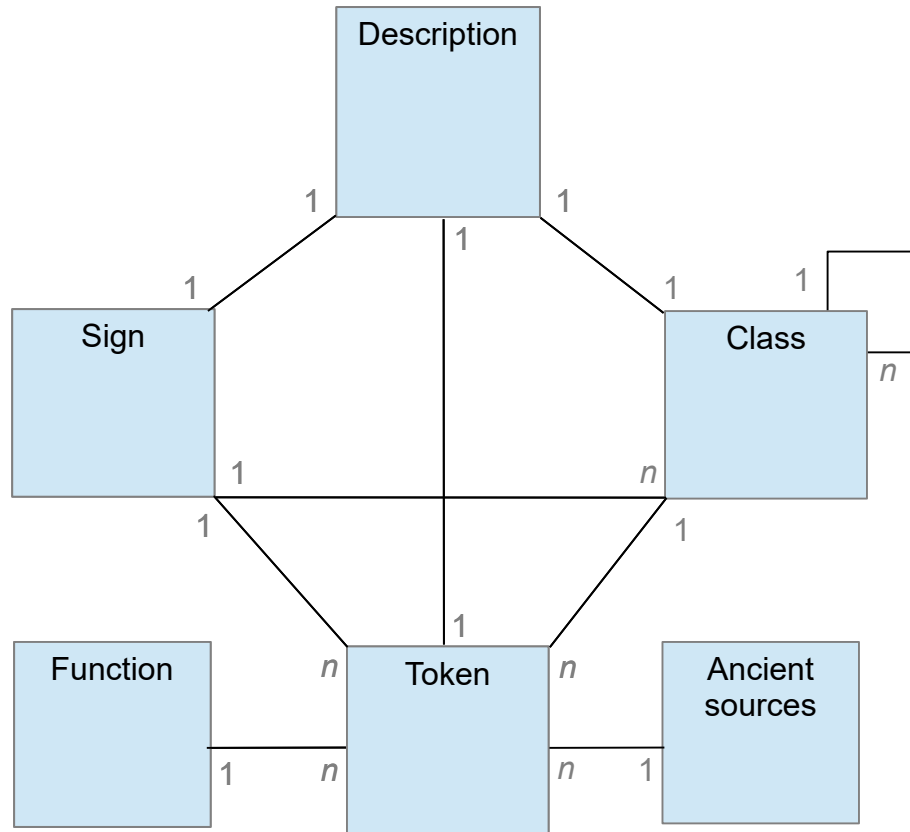

Abstract

The aim of this paper is to suggest a taxonomy that allows for a systematic description of the functions that can be fulfilled by hieroglyphic signs. Taking as a point of departure the insights of several studies that have been published on the topic since Champollion, we suggest that three key-features – namely, semography, phonemography and autonomy – are needed in order to provide a description of the glottic functions of the ancient Egyptian graphemes. Combining these paradigmatic and syntagmatic features, six core functions can be identified for the hieroglyphic signs: they may behave as pictograms, logograms, phonograms, classifiers, radicograms or interpretants. In a second step, we provide a definition for each function and discuss examples that illustrate the fuzziness between these core semiotic categories.

| | + SEMOGRAM | | – SEMOGRAM |
|----------------|---------------|---------------|--------------|
| AUTONOMOUS | Pictogram | Logogram | Phonogram |
| NON-AUTONOMOUS | Classifier | Radicogram | Interpretant |

Mit Computerlinguistik zum ägyptischen Wörterbuch

Der belgische Ägyptologe Jean Winand zählt zu den führenden Experten für die ägyptische Sprache. Mithilfe der Computerlinguistik begann er 2006 mit dem Ramses-Projekt die Arbeit an einer Textdatenbank, welche die jüngeren Phasen der ägyptische Sprachgeschichte abdeckt, und führte damit moderne linguistische Methoden in die Ägyptologie ein. Hoch angesehen ist Winand auch als Co-Autor einer mittelägyptischen Grammatik und für seine Arbeiten zu regionalen sprachlichen Unterschieden und zur Kodierung von Hieroglyphen. In Deutschland will Winand gemeinsam mit seinem Heidelberger Partner Joachim Friedrich Quack die Erkenntnisse aus seinem Ramses-Projekt mit Arbeiten aus Deutschland, wie der der Berliner Akademie der Wissenschaften an einem Thesaurus Linguae Aegyptiae, zusammenführen und ein umfassendes modernes Wörterbuch des Ägyptischen schaffen.
